

SYNTHETIC: an invented fairness report, written for Ratio's tests. No real person, court or trial.

Fairness Report on the Trial of Tamsin Orlo in the Republic of Quillmark

The monitor attended every hearing of the trial. The accused, a journalist, was charged with spreading false information after publishing an article about a water contract.

She was arrested at her home and was brought before a judge six days later. Her lawyer was not present at the remand hearing, and the court refused to hear two defence witnesses without giving reasons. The monitor relied on inter-national standards.

The court extended the detention three times, each time with the same wording as the first order, and did not address the arguments of the defence about the length of the detention. This page exists so that the text is long enough to pass the length check of the normaliser.